HIGH GRADE IN BELCHER EX SHAFT AGAIN

Belcher Extension is sinking on shaft No. 2. In the hole highgrade was followed down from the surface to 100 feet and a drift was sent out 50 feet and stopped in a full face of ore running well over $100. Sinking was resumed and the shaft is down to the 110-foot point where the same highgrade encountered in the upper part of the hole has widened out to 14 inches, carrying the same high values with a big showing of hornblende with the values running from $200 up. Two shifts are employed.

On the Belcher estate Engineer Ed J. Roberts is paying especial attention to the old Hearst shaft where the Hearst estate thirty years ago shipped $200 ore. Exploration shows that this ledge runs pretty flat or at an angle of 50 degrees. At the 100 foot point the Hearst people lost the vein and ran into another slip at 160 feet where another drift was started. Engineer Roberts picked up the vein at the 100-foot point and found that it continued at 53 degrees and put in a few raises and found from three to five feet of a good grade ore. To utilize this shaft for efficient mining would involve an outlay of $12,000 to $14,000 so a crosscut was sent out from the Belcher shaft from the 200 level and they are now driving to cut the vein as fast as two shifts of men can pound the drills. It is expected that they will cut the vein in a distance of 240 feet and pick up a series of fissures. The Belcher is also working from the Belcher Ex shaft, driving east to cut the surface ledge, which was traced for 500 feet.
